G6 2005ze OCLC Number: (OCoLC)71121382 Subject: Public buildings -- Security measures -- Standards -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 percent of the workforce has said they will not move out of this area. Their wives are employed in other jobs here, their children are in the school system and they want to stay here. In light of the costs and minimum added security offered by these standards, it is difficult to understand why the Department of Defense would unilaterally impose such standards and then expect the Congress and the country to foot the bill which is going to come to billions of dollars. At a meeting that Chairman Davis and I convened last week with representatives from northern Virginia's business community, and Ralph Newton, who is the principal deputy of Washington headquarters, serves as the Director of Defense Facilities, we raised several concerns with DOD's minimum antiterrorism building security standards. And it was clear from this briefing that many questions remain unanswered concerning the Department's rationale behind its stand and why such limited criteria were used over other methods of achieving maximum building security. So I hope that today's officials will be able to shed some much needed light on the development of these standards and why they were applied to the BRAC process, which never included building security standards among its criteria. The DOD building security standard was unfairly applied in the BRAC process in a manner that disadvantaged leased space. It seemed to be a back-door attempt by the Secretary of Defense to eliminate leased space in the National Capital region, a move which is not going to produce cost savings and could result in the loss of...
