Excerpt: . . . useful discovery of the propagation of that root from the shoots. In raising the potatoes from the box, many of the sprouts were leparated from the bulbs, being: much drawn by the heat, which afforded me an opportunity of attending to your hint, theoretical as I then esteemed it, nevertheless inclined to speculation, these sets I carefully placed in a, drill in my garden, weak as they were then on the 34th of February, and at the lame time, and in the fame plot, I, planted those shoots, which remained to the potatoe, in the usual way of drilling with the spade and stipvel. The season tjen proving very w. eta despaired of success from either, both appearing for sometime in a very, unpromising state. iit when vegetation a little more advances I perceived the sets and the shoots to vegetate, apace. In the latter ed. of March, I gave, them the first moulding, which-ibrwade them much. In the second week in April, radU ded rijore mould, and plainly saw t rbjenefit particularly in the shoots, which were. i much outgrowing the plants from;tefpoJatqe, and. whiqh deadly affvanced me, : ;: h: the power or quantum of vegetation, does not exist in the size of the bulb, ib much a in what is imbibed by the stem, and leaves of vegetables from the air, the shoots hav jrig by much the more luxuriant appearance, even so early as the month of May....
